Committee: United Nations General Assembly

Country: Republic of India

Agenda: Strengthening Global Actions and International Cooperation to Combat Climate Change

Climate change is no longer a future threat; it is happening right now. India believes that no single country can fight this huge crisis alone. It requires the teamwork and honest international cooperation. As a developing nation, India faces serious climate risks while trying to grow its economy. Therefore, we believe that climate actions must be fair, and developed nations should support developing countries in this shared fight.

India has always been active in global climate efforts. We signed the Paris Agreement and we have promised to achieve Net-Zero emissions by 2070. We also co-founded the International Solar Alliance with France to promote clean energy globally. However, India still faces massive environmental challenges at home. Every year, our people suffer from dangerous heatwaves, unpredictable monsoon rains that ruin crops, floods, and severe air pollution in big cities like Delhi. These problems directly affect our public health, our economy, and our farmers.

To tackle this, India is working hard on the ground. We have banned single-use plastics, started the National Clean Air Programme, and launched a major Green Hydrogen Mission. India became the world's third-largest solar electricity generator in 2025. To further strengthen global action, India proposes the following solutions:

We need a practical strategy that starts with richer nations finally fulfilling their promises to provide fair financial help, so developing countries can switch to green energy without drowning in debt. Alongside this funding, advanced green tech like solar systems and electric vehicles must be shared affordably across borders without expensive patents. While every country needs to invest heavily in solar and wind power, this clean energy transition must match each nation’s actual economic reality. Lastly, we must build global frameworks to protect our forests and ramp up tree planting, keeping in mind that forests are our best natural defense to absorb carbon.

In conclusion, India wants to remind all Member States that saving the planet is a shared responsibility. The time for empty promises is over; we need real action on the ground. India is fully ready to work with the international community to secure a safer and sustainable world for future generations.
